All objects at temperatures above absolute zero emit thermal radiation. However, for any particular wavelength and temperature, the amount of thermal radiation emitted depends on the emissivity of the object's surface.. Emissivity is defined as the ratio of the energy radiated from a material's surface to that radiated from a perfect emitter, known as a blackbody, at the same temperature and ...

What is emissivity and why is it important? - NPL

The Dimensional Metrology Group promotes health and growth of U.S. discrete-parts manufacturing by: providing access to world-class engineering resources; improving our services and widening the array of mechanisms for our customers to achieve high-accuracy dimensional measurements
